The French Emperor. The New York Times of Wednesday last,

NAPOLEON III .- A Southern gentleman. long resident in Paris, and probably more familiar with the political world of France than any other American, in writing to a friend in this city, makes some very interesting remarks upon the character of the present Emperor of the French, which we are permitted to publish:

"Constitutionally, Napoleon is as much of a fatalist as a man can be, and events have confirmed his natural tendency. He will leave a big rather than a great name in history. Of genius, in the true, however indefinite sense of that word, he has never yet given any proof. In civil matters, supposing his starting point and data to be good and sound, he has shown a rare judgment, perfect elf confidence, (completely amazing to Frenchmen in these latter years,) and a strong, steady will. In military concerns the most fortunate feature of his lucky careet, perhaps, was that which saved him from going to the Crimea. In matters of detail, strange to say, he is miserably deficient, as I am assured by M-, his leading minster during the Prince-Presidency. His forte ies in a few grandiose conceptions-great principles, as he would call them: Concentrate all power in Paris; keep the terminating knot or tie of concentration between his thumb and finger-hold the army well in hand-repay the first sutbreak at compound interest without a chance of discount-castrate the Press, and extinguish the natural surit of man in all Frenchmen, high and low, a due infusion of the artificial spirit of the

We presume the Times, in introducing the portraiture of Louis Napoleon, refers to Wm. W. Maon, esq., of Augusta, Ga., for many years the Paris correspondent of the National Intelligencer, and author of the very brilliant and able letters which appearel four or five years ago in the Southern Literary Messenger. Mr. Mann is unquesanably better informed upon all subjects resting to France than any one else in this country, and, we might add, than nine-tenths the members of the Legislative Assembly sell - Petersburg Express.

Nor Vox Populi, in discussing the propri ty of transferring the election of certain officers back from the people to the City Councils. asks what advantages would result therefrom These seem to me to be mannest, as I stated in a communication a few days since.

The members of that body certainly can more readily ascertain the qualifications of the numerous candidates, than the mass of voters, and consequently, with a due sense of the responsibility resting upon them, would be more likely to select those best suited for the desired situation. Moreover it would make our electious less a reason of excitement, by aliaying that almost universal thirst for office that the present system engenders.

The very fact he mentions as an objection. that we would have the same officers year after year, is a decided advantage, for constant changes are injurious, not only to the experienced incumbent who is removed, and to the n vice very dull; sales are nominal, and prices unsettled. who is initiated, but to the citizens who must ne cessarily suffer from the want or the latter's familiarity with the duties of his station. Permit me to say a word through the Gazette, as so much has been said, about the Long Bridge and Railroad. This is Washington's best avenue of trade, and is generally so conour loss; and therefore the bridge will be kept up by that city if possible, and the proof has been given in her providing the means of re-pairing the said bridge. But how stands our interest in the Canal, with the Aqueduct now have been obliged to loan the Canal Company $2,450 to repair the said work. I risk nothing when I say, it is a fixed fact, that the Canal is of more real benefit to the city of Alexandria than either of the Railroads, and yet we have those among us who would make war on it, and make the canal play second to the bridge, that is diverting our trade every day from us, and making our Marketing and Wood higher, which our Mechanics and laboring men feel; and it this policy is carried out must at last burden this City with rebuilding the Aqueduct at a cost not far from $150,000 in Corporation Bonds, on which there would be an annual interest of tory, a large and excellent assortment of $9,000, which must be paid by a direct tax, or OOR LOCKS AND KNOBS, the best ever we forever lose the Canal, with the chance of water privilege, by a proper effort of the Board assertment of BUILDING HARDWARE, we of Public Works of Virginia This fellow citizens is the plain truth, and no burnbug about a 4 mile Railroad from Burke's Station to Georgetown; and as the City Election is at hand, I submit the propriety of sending gentlemen t the Council known to be favorable to the interest of said Canal, and if possible save this people from $9,000 extra tax, by getting th Federal Government to build said Aqueduct, and granting the right of way over it for the United States Mail.
